THOUGH BASED in New York, P&T Interiors works on residential commissions on an international scale – a testament to their reputation and skills. The company's focus on close relationships with clients allows a boutique and highly personal approach.

"The Tower" in Luxembourg is an adaptation of four historic 250-year old landmark buildings into contemporary spaces that retain a farmhouse feel without the small utilitarian rooms typical of agricultural residences. This involved the creation of grand public areas in the tall main building together with a series of guest suites in separate buildings.

While external elements remained generally unaltered, construction of a sculptural staircase ascending the tower created a flowing passageway that unified the space while maintaining minimalism. A particular quirk required by the clients was a caged area for their beloved parrot – P&T integrated this into the central public room of the tower, creating a tall aviary feature.

Custom wallpaper prints of tin tiles contrast with the polished concrete walls and wooden flooring to retain a rustic feel in the otherwise modern design. A similar approach was taken with furniture and textiles, using rougher and worn stylings in the public spaces that turn into softer but bolder fabrics in private bedrooms. The majestic but potentially overwhelming height of the larger rooms is ameliorated by the use of many lower-hanging pendant lights which serve to create a more intimate feel whilst generating vertical focus for the views.
