P&T INTERIORS is a boutique interior design firm which provides highly personalized residential design services to an international client base. The company works to bridge the gap between a project's full potential and the boundaries imposed by the realities of life, believing that a great design is the culmination of a relationship between a designer, a client and the space.

The Box, an award-winning project by P&T, is located in New York City's Garment District which is the centre for fashion production and design. This unique 4,500 square foot apartment with a 500 square foot terrace is in a 12-storey, pre-war Art Deco building constructed in the 1920s.

The aim of P&T's design was to maintain as much as possible of the historical elements of the space while upgrading it to provide all modern life necessities. A challenge was to ensure ample entertaining space while not sacrificing any of the closed intimate spaces. This was accomplished through space versatility and a game of 'concealment and revelation' through a multitude of pivot and pocket doors, numerous glass partitions and through playing with volume vs. void and visual vs. physical barriers/windows. Warmth is incorporated through black gloss wood-panelling as well as furnishings and accessories that revisit the European 'grandmother' style by updating it with a contemporary twist.
