

3 PEEK- A-BLUE

When your great-great-grandfather is Louis Comfort Tiffany, you grow up learning a lot about how to integrate architecture with interior design. That's the unique backstory of designer Nadia Watts, who helped a couple with now-grown children remodel their historic Georgian-style home on Seventh Avenue Parkway in Denver's Country Club neighborhood. A primary task was expanding the second-floor master bedroom and bath. By annexing another bedroom no longer needed, Watts and her team created a much larger en-suite space with generous window light. For décor, she took a cue from the couple's large collection of blue-and-white china—one of their favorite color combinations. Many elements radiate a mood of tranquility, from soft window coverings (Ralph Lauren fabric with Samuel & Sons trim) to the wooden tub surround (Aspen Leaf Interiors) to the Benjamin Moore wall-paint shade of "Palest Pistachio." But a strong counterpoint that really pops is the water-closet wallpaper from Farrow & Ball. It's an updated paisley-block print, bringing a note of vibrant fun to an otherwise soft-toned, stately scheme.

DESIGNER
NADIA WATTS
NADIA WATTS INTERIOR DESIGN
NADIAWATTS.COM