ALPINE ESCAPE

For her Silicon Valley clients, Kelly Hohla eschews the traditional mountain-home aesthetic in favor of her signature tailored-with-a-twist style.

Ski-house decor often conjures images of moose heads above the fireplace and paintings depicting animals in the wild, not to mention an excessive amount of pinecone- and log-themed accessories. But interior designer Kelly Hohla (kellyhohlainteriors.com) was determined to avoid such clichés in the Big Sky, Mont., seasonal retreat she devised for her clients, a young family that resides in Hillsborough. “For us,” says the wife, “a country vibe just wasn’t authentic.” So Hohla infused their 4,500-square-foot abode with her trademark bold patterns and colors for a decidedly more refined than rustic look. “I wanted to contrast that old mountain-home feel,” Hohla explains. “The architecture is so strong with it, why add more layers of that on?”

The owners—the husband works in investment management, and the wife is a stay-at-home mother to their son and two daughters—knew they could trust Hohla and her taste implicitly: Their relationship dates back seven years; this was the second residence they worked on together, and they are currently collaborating on a third. “They wanted a ski house to get away to with friends and family—something that is comfortable first and stylish second,” says Hohla. “I saw no reason why we couldn’t have both in equal amounts!”

The makeover is even more impressive when you consider that Hohla’s San Francisco-based team did it all in six months—remotely.

FUN MEETS FUNCTION

From top: The downstairs media room, awash in neutral hues, is punctuated by colorful and patterned accents; the adjacent bar area, illuminated by pendants from Urban Electric, was envisioned as a casual dining spot.

BRIGHT MOMENTS

"We completed this project in a very short amount of time, but still managed to pay attention to the small and important details," says Alana Dorn, who served as Kelly Hohla Interiors' project manager for the residence. "This was very important to us, as we wanted our clients to walk into a warm and inviting space that felt like home."

Among the clients' priorities was accommodating as many guests as possible (according to the wife, they've had 18 people in the home at one time). In addition to the dwelling's four bedrooms—which includes two appointed with bunk beds—Hohla created more sleeping quarters by integrating Murphy beds in a playroom and in an office. The double-height living, dining and kitchen area, along with a downstairs media room that includes a bar, are conducive to large gatherings too.

In the living room, the expansive windows overlook the picturesque terrain. There's an absence of window treatments because, Hohla posits, "we couldn't see any reason ever why we would want them to be blocked." A Michael Gregory painting from John Berggruen Gallery surmounts the stone-clad fireplace ("The foggy valley just has a quiet and calming feel to it," says Hohla). Teal figures prominently as an accent in the space, courtesy of a custom leather-and-walnut ottoman on casters and a pair of armchairs, both fabricated by Edward Ferrell + Lewis Mittman. The latter are topped with purple-and-aqua wool plaid pillows that add an extra dose of visual punch. A Hudson sofa done in a gray plaid allows for comfortable lounging. And the scheme's steely hue carries over into the adjacent dining room, where a BDDW walnut table with leaden tones is flanked by chairs upholstered in a Holland & Sherry gray-and-purple houndstooth. "It's not your typical colors for houndstooth, but it reads as neutral," Hohla notes. "When you're sitting in it, you really see the detail and how it ties into the living room."

Each of the bedrooms seems to have its own personality. For instance, a custom wool check headboard, set against a branch-themed Trove wallpaper, anchors the crisp and contemporary master. The photography is a nod to the locale: Lee Friedlander's images, from his America by Car series, were snapped during his travels through Montana. "The Cloud chandelier by Apparatus appears as if it is floating, and contributed to the light and ethereal vibe in this room," says Dorn. A guest bedroom exudes a masculine aesthetic with a tufted headboard of Hohla's own design, a wrought-iron chandelier from Troy Lighting and a Phillip Jeffries wallpaper punctuated with rows of rivets. Elsewhere, a small space already outfitted with wooden bunk beds was brightened with another Trove design on the walls and ceiling, this one with a moth motif that most observers mistaken for butterflies. For Hohla, the moths lend a CONTINUED...
